

How CCP Propaganda Exalts a Fictional Narrative of China History

- that hides its continuity in the legacy of centralized dictatorial rule by Emperors that enslaved, tortured and killed millions of its subjects

From: sutapasb@talktalk.net

Given the recent CCP aggression on the Line of Actual Control in Ladakh [which, contrary to Chinese lies, was part of the Sikh Empire (not part of the Manchu Empire) when the British took over – note also that the Manchu Empire (Qing Dynasty) which conquered Tibet was not Chinese but Manchurian and included China as a conquest], this article about a Hindu temple in Vietnam is of significance. Note how large Tibet is compared to China on the 1864 map by some European in the article.

The CCP [and countless Western Orientalists] regurgitate the absurd false propaganda that China supposedly has 5,000 years of civilisation and is the oldest continuous civilisation. In reality, China as a unified entity [in China proper – behind the Great Wall] only came into being 2,200 years ago, around the same time as Asoka's Empire, and it repeatedly broke up and changed since then. Civilisation in the China region actually only goes back to 1,600 b.c.e [3,600 years] making Chinese civilisation far younger than that of the Middle East, India and the Mediterranean. Yet Dictator Xi etc. even try to claim that China is more than 5,000 years old, sometimes claiming 7,000 years of history etc.

An explanation from a British academic on how the Communists use this false propaganda to justify Communist rule – China as eternal and unchanging in authoritarian control etc. – on EastAsiaStudent forum – seems to no longer be accessible via Google – showing again how the CCP censors information in the Free World. Chinese court officials used to make up absurd self-aggrandizing claims that other powers such as the British were China's vassals. Timur Lenk was so infuriated by false Chinese claims that he was their vassal that he started an invasion of China but died before he got there!

Even China critic Steven Mosher regurgitates this 5,000 years of history myth in the Preface to his 'Bully of Asia' – but in fact the very text of his preface contradicts his claim as it states that the first civilisation started c. 1,600 b.c.e. Mosher shows that China has had brutal, repressive, police states for over 2,500 years – it is wrong to blame China's authoritarianism on Western Communism. The only exception was the brief Nationalist period of 1911-1949. The Chin (Qin) Emperor who unified China was notorious for burning all political and philosophical books except for his own memoirs. He brutally tortured and killed hundreds of Confucian scholars. Dissidents were forced to work as slave labourers building the Great Wall – over one million died and their bones were used to make the cement. Hundreds of thousands of prisoners of war would be executed [this occurred also in the Warring States period before unification]. Brutal repression, censorship, brainwashing, informer networks spying on the people, collective punishment of relatives and friends of dissidents, forced labour for dissidents have been perennial features of all periods of Dynastic China. Mao boasted that the Chin Emperor had killed only 460 intellectuals, he had killed tens of thousands – adding that the Chin Order still remains! The Western documentaries don't emphasize this aspect of the Chin Emperor [or the execution of the workers and architects of his hidden tomb] when they wax lyrical about his Terracotta Army!

This is due to China's Legalist Ideology which sought to centralize all power in the Emperor and the State – long before Karl Marx was born.

I have stressed the fact that, contrary to Chinese myths rehashed by Western commentators, it was India that civilised South East Asia and India – not China – was the most influential civilisation in Eastern Asia. In reality, China itself was culturally dominated by India! As KMT ambassador to the USA Hu Shih wrote, India conquered China for 20 centuries without sending a single soldier, due to the Chinese adopting Indian Buddhism and all the Indian knowledge and culture that came with it [as of course in Tibet which got its Buddhist culture directly from India]. Lin Yutang wrote that India was China's teacher in so many things.

In Japan, 80% of the gods worshipped by the Japanese are Hindu deities and Sanskrit chants are still used. The South Korean leader visited Ayodhya [although the ancient Korean Queen may have come from Ayutya in Southern India] recently due to the ancient Indian links. The original Filipino written language was based on Sanskrit as with the Sanskrit bases of most South-East Asian languages.

<https://sutapas.com/>

The Brainstem Brainwaves of Atman-Brahman [Universal Consciousness]: 2015 by Sutapas Bhattacharya

<https://indianexpress.com/article/research/in-vietnams-shiva-linga-discovery-more-validation-of-a-farther-india-past-6440155/>